Beginning 19 August 2021, Jana Sophia Nolle's internationally recognised photographic – performative project “Living Room” will be on view at the Haus am Kleistpark | Projektraum.

Now living primarily in Berlin, since 2016 the artist has been concentrating on the ever-growing rift between rich and poor. This forms the background to her conceptual photographic study of temporary homeless shelters which she began in San Francisco between 2017/2018. Through the example of living-spaces the artist thematises socio-political change and aspects related to gentrification.

Nolle approached people living on the street, took portraits of them, and asked for permission to photograph their dwellings. Then, in a performative act, Nolle recreated and shot their shelters within the flats and houses of the well-to-do. In 2019 Nolle received the Haus am Kleistpark Photography Stipend and was able to continue the project in Berlin. Plans are underway to continue the project in other metropolitan areas.

Jana Sophia Nolle studied at the Ostkreuzschule für Fotografie in Berlin and has collected transnational life-experience through her work as an international election observer. Nolle's artistic method is multi-disciplinary and shifts between research, observation, conceptual photography, and work with objects and installations. In “Living Room” she defies social boundaries, challenges social hierarchies, and brings together – or into our focus – what we are not used to seeing together.

A book of the same name appeared in 2020 with Kerber Verlag.
